It is hard to imagine life without chairs, but just five hundred years ago chairs were the reserve of the nobility and ecclesiastics. The bench and stool were the forerunners of the armless side chairs and bobbin turned chairs of the sixteenth century. The Reformation frowned upon carving and other ornament on furniture, so it was not until the Restoration that the chair became a medium of creative expression.

From the rustic charm of the ladderback to the elegance of an upholstered chair - each style has been recreated to give comfort and style. Each chair reflects many historical and social developments - each has a story to tell.

Enduring Quality

A detailed photograph of a period dining room. In the foreground, a long wooden dining table is set with several tall, ornate candlesticks holding white candles. The chairs have a dark wood frame and are upholstered in a maroon fabric with a gold fleur-de-lis pattern. In the background, a large wooden bookshelf is filled with books and decorative blue and white vases. A warm lamp sits on a side table. To the right, a large stone fireplace is decorated with a large arrangement of white and yellow flowers. The floor is made of polished wood, and a large, patterned rug is laid out. The overall atmosphere is warm and elegant.
