Contractor:
 Whitehouse Construction

Client:
 Forestry Commission England

As part of the improvements to the Visitor Facilities at Sherwood Pines in Nottingham, the Forestry Commission required pay station shelters that would be aesthetically pleasing in the wooded environment. Langley Design worked with Whitehouse Construction to come up with a design and price that would meet the Clients expectations. We were able to achieve on time and on budget to the customers complete satisfaction. Part of our process is to revisit projects after several years to see how the supplied products are performing and 2 years later, even though the timber has weathered slightly, it's still in great condition and the shelters blend into the landscape beautifully.
