

David A Annand Sculptor

'Nae Day Sae Dark' in Perth High Street is one of Annand's best known pieces. This powerful testimony to the work of the poet William Soutar shows the potential of his technical and aesthetic experience. It answers the demanding criteria of public-art, thus combining heavy engineering, street furniture, local history, poetry, even irony and despair. As a composition it is as tight as the poem itself and equally accessible; important factors in both their philosophies.

"Looking back at my sculpture you'd think I was obsessed with giving gravity a hard time and taking my materials to the limit. It's easy enough to make life-like sculptures but by nudging them off balance in an awkward place - it makes them vulnerable, precarious; they get an urgency to be alive."

"Until the interest of an artist shifts from the personal sensation to a sense of communal service his work cannot grow.
As pure artist his work maybe technically more perfect in the exploitation of the ego - but it cannot take on real greatness until it bears the burden of a people."

Wm. Soutar, poet, Perth 9th August 1932
